

Graduate profile – Lucy

I went into Collyers knowing what I wanted as a career but not how to get there. This course gave me hands on experiences in a range of settings, opening my eyes to my interest in special educational needs whilst getting lots of opportunities to get stuck in and develop my own skills and love in supporting children.

Early years put me in great stead for my current degree in primary teaching specialising in special educational needs. Furthermore the theoretical classroom learning not only backs up best practise for when I'm teaching now but allowed me to explore my interest in psychology which has caused me to look into educational psychology masters.

If you want to work with children in some way or form, this is a supportive, highly rewarding and fulfilling starting point for your future career. From this course growing my passion for small minds, I am hoping to graduate next year as a teacher and continue my education to become an educational psychologist.
